HELD HIS HEAD HIGH.

He Had Reason Enough, and He Didn't Hesitate to Explain.

Punny how one single fellow can innocently cause a great deal of excitement, yet it happens sometimes. Here is how it was done on one of the main streets of West Philadelphia:

The other afternoon a young man was crossing Fifty-second street. He held his head thrown back as if to look at something high in the air. He stopped when he reached the sidewalk, and three or four people came up behind him.

After standing there a few minutes the young man started up the street.
A little farther he stopped again, still gazing up at the sky. In a few minutes thirty or forty people had assembled. Apparently the young man was a bit hard of hearing, for he paid no attention to the comments of the crowd.

They followed him up the street. He stopped once more, this time in front of a moving picture theater which was letting out after the matinee perform-

"PERHAPS IT IS LOOKING FOR RAIN."

ance. The people who packed the sidewalk followed his example and began to study the heavens.

"Wh-wh-wh-wh! Is he too-oh-king for?"

stuttered one excited individual.

"Perhaps he's looking for rain," suggested one little chap who thought this was his cue to spring a joke. But still nothing happened.

The young man, with the mob still at his heels, walked on until he reached a nearby public square. While the spectators wondered he stopped at a drinking fountain, took a cup from his hands, filled it, drained it and then looked around inquiringly at the crowd.

"Say, what's the matter?" said one fellow who had kept up with the procession from the start.

"Nothing," replied the young man.

"But what were you looking for?"

"Oh, I had taken a pill, and it would not go down. I thought if I held my head up long enough I might swallow it. Nothing doing. So I came over here and got a drink. It's down now.
Thank you. Goodbye."—Philadelphia Record.

Don't Fear Life.

Be not afraid of life. Believe that life is worth living and your belief will help create the fact.—William James.

Ample Protected.

Lord Alvanley was always ready with a joke. Once traveling with Berkeley Craven in a postchaise and four they were upset. Naturally very indignant at the catastrophe, Berkeley Craven determined to give the first postboy a "taste of his quality," but finding him an old man simply remarked, "Your age protects you."

Lord Alvanley "went for" postboy the second, but, finding him young and determined looking, wisely retired with "As for you, sir, your youth protects you."

His Only Guide.

The distinguished and well beloved bishop of a certain southern state is so absent minded that his family is always apprehensive for his welfare when he is away from it.

Not long ago, while making a journey by rail, the bishop was unable to find his ticket when the conductor asked for it.

"Never mind, bishop," said the conductor, who knew him well, "I'll get it on my second round."

However, when the conductor passed through the car again the ticket was still missing.

"Oh, well, bishop, it will be all right if you never find it," the conductor assured him.

"No, it won't, my friend," contradicted the bishop. "I've got to find that ticket. I want to know where I'm going."—Youth's Companion.

Good, but Small.

Franz Abt, the song writer, long since passed to the beyond, was a surprising gourmand. "A goose," he used to say, "is a very pretty bird, but it has one great fault—it is a little too much for one and much too little for two."

Coming out of a restaurant one day looking supremely happy, Herr Kap-pelemeister, said a friend to him, "you seem to have dined well." "Yes, I had a fair dinner; it was turkey." "And was there a good company around the board?" "Yes, good, but small; just two, indeed, the turkey and myself."
